

SMOKED SALMON

SMOKING & CURING TECHNIQUES

COLD SMOKED SALMON

Raw, skin on salmon fillets are covered with a salt and sugar cure. Once ready, they are washed and left to mature and dry. The salmon is then smoked in a wood smoking kiln at around 30°C using either oak or beech wood.

Fillets are removed from the kiln and chilled to under 5°C before being trimmed and ready to slice either with or without skin.

HOT SMOKED SALMON

The steps are the same as above but the salmon is smoked at a minimum of 72°C.

GRAVADLAX

This is cured and not smoked, the cure process is the same and traditionally includes dill which is evident on the end product. This product is always sold as a D-Cut.

THE RIGHT CUT

WHOLE SIDE

A filleted, full side of a salmon, ready to be cut in the way that suits your needs.

LONG-SLICED

A deep skinned fillet is sliced horizontally down the full length of the fillet between 2.5-4mm. The fillet is then sliced lengthwise vertically down the middle so you have manageable width slices to handle (this is the more premium cut against the D-cut).

D-CUT

The D-cut is sliced across the full width of the fillet on a horizontal angle resembling the letter D on the slice shape.

What our experts say

“We’ve really noticed a change in the demand for smoked salmon. More imaginative marinades & cures as well as clever new smoking techniques which really lift menus.

This doesn’t mean that there’s no room for traditional smoked salmon, premium products are still in high demand and what’s more premium that a quality smoked salmon?” M&J Seafood
